Mrs. Alvin Nagel of 139th St., Orland Park, was driving south on the Southwest Highway about 5:45 p.m., when at 11th St. a car driven by the son of Mr. Fred Claussen of Worth ran thru the stop sign and hit the Nagel car in the front which caused the bumpers to lock and drag the cars around. The third car, a hit and run driver, hit the two cars but got away.

Mrs. Nagel suffered from shock and is badly bruised, both internally and externally, several cuts on her face and nose received from her eye glasses which were broken. She was taken to the Little Company of Mary Hospital on 95th St. for treatment and later taken home.

Salvation Army Carries On

Missionary work by The Salvation Army is being carried on today in the countries of the world, having been resumed in many countries where Salvation Army officers were not allowed to continue activities during the war.

Work in the mission field by this organization has grown to such an extent since 1879, when The Salvation Army in London began its dramatic expansion that The Army's missionary work compares today with that of older missionary societies, according to Major Edward R. Johnson of Joliet.

This international work of The Salvation Army is carried on by more than 28,000 officers, who use 102 languages in their welfare and evangelistic activities.

Salvation Army officers in charge of the organization's missionary work have been, to a great extent, natives of the countries in which they serve, and during World War II, 5,000 Salvationists were able to continue their work in the European countries alone.

The presence in each country of Salvation Army officers has figured greatly in post-war relief plans which were made many months before the war's end. Distribution of clothes which are continually being sent by The Salvation Army to all war-torn countries, is now being administered by these officers.

In India alone, The Salvation Army operates 5,707 centers of work, including day, industrial and boarding schools, 32 hospitals and dispensaries, and settlements that accommodate many hundreds of lepers.

In other countries of the East, The Salvation Army operates girls' and boys' homes, eye hospitals, farms and colonies for destitute natives, homes of rest, homes for discharged prisoners. Women's homes, industrial training homes, hospitals and dispensaries, including traveling dispensaries.

ACT TO CONDEMN LAND FOR ROAD

In an attempt to obtain right of way necessary for improvement of the Mokena-Tinley Park roadway, condemnation proceedings have been instituted in Circuit court, Joliet this week against Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Weber of Chicago and the Alliance Life Insurance company.

As alleged in the petition, the Will County board of supervisors at its April 30 meeting adopted a resolution providing for the improvement of the road. The work is to be carried on thru motor fuel tax allotments to the county.

Altho the state attempted to acquire the title to the land necessary to ease a sharp curve in the roadway the Webers have refused to sell, it was pointed out. As a result, the condemnation proceedings were instituted. Under this procedure, a group of 12 citizens will inspect the property and appraise it, with the state paying the appraised value.

In addition to easing the curves, the road is to be resurfaced. A new bridge is to be erected also. Contract for the reinforced concrete structure was let about 10 days ago by the county highway department.

The condemnation proceedings were instituted by Charles Robson as assistant state's attorney.

Incorporation Wins By Narrow Margin

At an orderly election held last Saturday, the citizens of New Lenox voted in favor of incorporating their village. This election climaxed two years of controversy on the issue. The vote was close—248 yes and 231 no, with 7 spoiled ballots about equally divided.

After the vote was counted there was much talk and handshaking. Most of the people, regardless of how they voted, expressed the thought that now that the question was settled they all wanted to work together to give New Lenox a good government.

The vote was canvassed by Will County Judge Fred R. Adams, May 28th and the results of the election were verified. At a hearing which will be held as soon as possible Judge Adams will arrange for an election of officers to be held forty to sixty days later. At that time he will also give instructions for handling the election and probably appoint an administrator.

THANK YOU

The New Lenox Incorporating Committee wishes to thank all those who gave their time, effort and contributions to make last Saturday's election a success. We also want to thank those who expressed their belief in a bright future for New Lenox by voting in favor of incorporation.

FLOWER VANDALS

Some Tinley Park residents have reported that recently some unknown people have been cutting and carrying away flowers from their gardens at their homes. This is an unfortunate condition to occur in any community, for where there are nice flowers blossoming it shows that much time and labor has been put forth in order to beautify their community as well as their homes. We hope that the next time any one is tempted to do this kind of stealing they will think twice and refrain from doing so.

This Is The Story Of An Egg

We have heard of the Easter Bunny egg, the rotten eggs, the pre-historic eggs recently found, but this week was the first time we have ever seen an egg within an egg.

It so happens that Mrs. Arthur Friant who lives on a farm on the Lincoln highway one mile east of Frankfort, has a most wonderful flock of 200 New Hampshire Reds, which are just one year old. A while ago while breaking eggs into a skillet for frying for a family meal, she was most surprised to find another egg, shell and all, within. The inner egg had a yolk and white but the outer one did not have a yolk.

This week Mrs. Friant found again what she thought might be another peculiar egg. It measured three inches in length and about five inches in diameter. She decided to boil it and when opening it, found again another egg, shell and all, within.

Out of the 200 chickens, Mrs. Friant gets 189 eggs a day and each day there are several double and sometimes triple yolk eggs. Some days she gets as many as nine double yolk eggs.

Norman Morton (in truck) is receiving gift wheat for the farm bureau from Mr. and Mrs. Burt E. Beach, while Mrs. Dorothy Moorhouse, right, the originator of the campaign, checks with Mrs. Beach. Mrs. Moorhouse, a farmer's wife, received the active support of the entire farming region of Medina county.

Correction of Soil Compaction Urged

Deep Plowing and Fertilization Needed

Heavy farm equipment used in plowing and preparing land for crops and in cultivating and harvesting operations later, is harming the structure of some heavy textured soils and shutting off ventilation needed for the roots of growing crops, according to Dr. George N. Hoffer, agronomist at Purdue university.

Soil, either dry or wet, is compacted by the weight of tractors and other heavy equipment to a depth of 18 to 24 inches, Dr. Hoffer pointed out. Present plowing and cultivation practices are largely limited to 6 or 8 inch depths as originally determined by light weight implements drawn by mules or horses.

"Ventilation requirements of a good soil with a high organic matter content, are based on the escape of approximately 1,100 cubic feet of carbon dioxide gas daily from each acre in a corn or tomato field during the growing season," Dr. Hoffer declared. "At the same time the entry of approximately 4,000 cubic feet of air into the soil daily is necessary to support this combustion of the decomposing organic matter.

"Thus changes in the compaction of the soil from 6 to 12 or 18 inches in depth due to heavy equipment, interfere with these gas exchanges, and often contribute to the creation of oxygen deficiencies that result in the suffocation of the roots, or in the possible accumulation of carbon dioxide and other materials toxic to the roots."

Correction of these soil compactions which occur immediately below the plow furrow lies very probably in the use of deeper plowing equipment. One new type of plow breaks the compacted soil in the 6 to 12 inch zone and permits better aeration and the deeper placement of fertilizers.

Aerosol Bomb Suited For Farm Buildings

DDT aerosol bomb used to kill flies and other insects as well as germs in dairy barn.

Get rid of the flies and your cows will give more milk. Get rid of the flies and your hens will lay more eggs. Two wartime developments will make this possible. DDT, the new insecticide and the aerosol bomb, the new insecticide dispenser, are the answers.

A small cylindrical metal container with a valve on top, the bomb contains concentrated insecticide dissolved in Freon. Freon is a liquid under pressure; when the valve is opened to release the pressure, the Freon expands, changes to a gas and escapes from the bomb, carrying the insecticide with it.

Hay Waxing Treatment Conserves Carotene

Alfalfa and cereal grass can be stored with little loss of carotene if they are autoclaved, pressed into blocks, and the blocks sealed with flexible wax, according to the University of Wisconsin. While expensive, it offers possibilities for vitamin supplements such as alfalfa leaf meal of dried cereal grass. No other satisfactory method has been found to conserve the carotene in forage.

The 100,000 who gathered at Louisville for the Kentucky Derby offered a keen cross section of the sporting viewpoint. For they came from practically every state, and all are sports-minded. Outside of the Derby itself, I found that they were talking about the other turf classics, the two pennant races and the Louis-Conn fight.

It was rather amazing to hear the number backing Conn if the odds remain around 3 to 1, or perhaps a trifle less. One well-known sportsman from the Far West told me that a big rush of Conn money had begun to arrive. The main theory seemed to be that while both men had been away from the ring for four years, Conn was still four years younger and he could afford to lose that much time to better advantage than could Louis.

So far as the two pennant races are concerned, most of the sentiment on the American league side belongs to the Boston Red Sox. The angle being that Owner Tom Yawkey had spent too much money to keep on missing pennants forever, and that both Yawkey and Boston rated a flag. The early showing of the Red Sox indicated that they may be even stronger than the pre-season dope indicated, because their pitching is better than it originally looked.

I found that the majority with whom I talked still don't believe that the Yankees can get enough consistent pitching to win. They rate Spud Chandler as one of the best in either league, but they also say that a pennant race is a heavy burden for the one right arm. Chandler is on his way to beat his great 1943 record, when he won 20 games and lost only 4. Spud still figures he might just as well have won 23 and lost only 1 that year. He always has been a hard-working, bear-down pitcher and he still has his stuff intact.

Lots of Dodger Fans

While I found that the National league fans were naturally pulling for their home teams, such as the Cubs and Cardinals, their outside sympathy still remains with the Dodgers. It is surprising what a strong nationwide following the Dodgers have. The enthusiasm of Brooklyn itself, on the baseball side, has a lot to do with this. In picking a World Series contender from the National league, the Dodger vote would be overwhelming. Their early rush to the front only started louder cheering.

Few believe that any team is going to beat out the Cardinals when the season finally swings into a steady grind. They look to have too many good ballplayers to be headed off by any team now in sight.

Almost every other spectator wanted me to pick the winner of the Louis-Conn meeting. The only answer is that thus far neither has come into his real training period—at least, far enough along to give any true line. The only good line one can get must come in the last two weeks, when the tip-off should be due.

1946 Backfield Stars

I also ran into a number of leading football coaches at the recent Derby among the vast assemblage from the 48 states. Two of these were Wallie Butts of Georgia and Paul Bryant of Kentucky. They were talking about the job selectors are going to have in naming the four best backs of the coming season.

"For example," Wallie Butts said, "who can name a better all-around back than Charley Trippi of Georgia, who, as a passer, runner, tackler or blocker, has everything a star back needs. And he is exceptionally good at them all."

Paul Bryant, who had a fine record at Maryland last fall, began to figure out the leading backs. "Trippi is certainly one of the best," he said. "But, in addition, there still are Blanchard and Davis from West Point to be remembered. There will be Bud Young at Illinois, Bob Fenimore at Oklahoma A. and M.; and there also will be Harry Gilmer at Alabama. And don't think these will complete the list. There will be others who can't be overlooked. There should be at least 10 or 12 great backs and I don't mean merely pretty good. For example, there is also Wedemeyer from St. Mary's, who will have more support than he could call on last fall."

The Big Batting Race

The expected batting race among Ted Williams, Joe DiMaggio and Dick Wakefield finds the Red Sox slugger showing most of the early foot. Williams has been belting away at a .350 clip or better, with DiMaggio down below .270. Wakefield has been of little help to the Tigers, with a mark under .240. Dom DiMaggio has been outshining them all with an average above .400, and Charley Keller also is riding high.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

DOAN'S PILLS

DESERT ROSE

By ROLLIN BROWN

W.N.U. FEATURES

Deputy sheriff Jim Doane is called upon by Sheriff Sam Flick to track down a gang of train robbers. The sheriff tells Jim that he believes the gang is led by a girl, daughter of Pio Alvaro, a former rancher. Jim starts to trail the robber band from the point in the desert of San Loreto county where the hold-up took place. His horse is bitten by a rattlesnake and Jim has to shoot him. Jim trudges through the sand, until, overcome by thirst, he collapses. Four horsemen led by a girl rescue him. From their conversation it is plain that they are Spaniards or Mexicans. Jim awakens three days later in a comfortable bed. When he calls for water a tall man responds.

CHAPTER III

Doane saw a tall, languid man enter. He was dressed in a cheap, dark suit that still, somehow, gave him a dapper, suave appearance. He smoked a cigarette, lazily, his eyes squinting against the rising curls of smoke. Even so, they were the first thing Doane noticed about him... those odd, gray-green eyes, and the supple ease of the man's every gesture. The face was pallid.

"Well, my friend," said the languid one, with the accented inflection which the Spanish mother-tongue gives to later acquired English. "It is still more water? I think we pour most one well full into you already. But it is still more, yes?"

Doane fell back on his pillow. A great sobbing sigh escaped his lips. "Thank God!" he muttered.

When the languid fellow stood beside his bed, questioning Doane with his eyes, he found him that swiftly in a profound deep slumber. The man finished his cigarette, watching Doane, a half-smile on his lips. He shrugged his flexible shoulders. "So it is not water after all, my friend? An' what will happen now, I wonder?" he asked aloud. "Eh? I wonder!"

Doane slept deeply, in a dreamless peace, for nearly twenty hours. During this time an elderly woman replaced the man's watch and care of him. She sponged Doane's body; she placed damp cloths against his forehead. He slept on, unknowing. Then he awoke at last, there was a shaft of bright afternoon sunlight peeping through one of the windows of his room.

Perhaps it had been the sound of muffled hoofs in the garden outside that had awakened him. He heard a horse stamp fretfully. Then low voices, coming nearer, waiting in softly through the open window to his ears. The speech was Spanish.

"... And last night before Monte goes to work at the station, the stranger awakes," said a woman's voice. "But when Monte goes into the room, it is different. The man looks at Monte and he mutters, 'Gracias a Dios! That's all. He falls to sleep again that soon. And ever since he sleeps just like a baby. Like a child, senorita, with a smile on his lips. To see him so, you would not think him the evil man he is.'"

There was a low, musical laugh in answer, and a second voice said: "I think I would like to see this man we rescued now. Perhaps—one can never know!—it would be well to look carefully and remember him."

"While he sleeps so, you mean?" "Yes. No other way, to be sure. While his eyes see nothing in return."

Footsteps along some outer veranda, and the older woman's voice saying:

"Monte shaved his face yesterday. You would not know him as the same man. While he sleeps, he looks so—like a gentle child. It is true. He looks like my own Monte when he was young."

The low laugh again, in mild derision. "But it is the heart of a man that counts, senorita. This man's heart is known—it is steel! Monte's is gold. His name is Doane. I know many things about him."

The door opened to Doane's room. The elderly woman glanced in; then walked softly to the bed. She looked down upon a man who breathed deeply, as though in sleep. The man's eyes were closed.

"Pst! Come now."

Light steps across the room. Silence. At length—

"No, I would not have recognized him as the same man."

"Just so. He is even handsome, senorita. A caballero."

"If one forgets to think of the heart," said the softer voice. "But... well, I am glad to have saved him from the death of thirst. That is a horrible way to die."

A door slammed. "Monte is come," said the older woman as she glided softly from the room. "And he is hungry like the wolf."

Doane heard the door close noiselessly, and he realized with a start of satisfaction that the younger girl had tarried behind, the girl with the soft voice. His eyes were glued shut, but his straining ears told him she had come to his bedside, that she was standing there looking down at him. Seconds crawled past, like weary centuries, as he fought back a smile and the temptation to open his eyes. At last, softly, she spoke, as though to herself:

"A caballero, yes! You are a handsome one, mio amigo; what friends we might be, if the gods had not made us enemies. You come to put the handcuff on Dolores, yes?" She laughed, and her laugh made Doane think again of a babbling mountain brook; or was it the low tinkling beauty of a vesper bell? She laughed, and she went on, musingly: "You come for that, but the desert put his chain first on you, yes? And the desert throw you at my feet, half dead. The fortunes of war, my caballero!"

She stood in utter quiet for another second, and then Doane sensed that she was moving toward the door. He opened his eyes and looked at her.

"Buenos dias, senorita." The girl whirled, and her hand flew to her hip. She smothered a little cry of exasperation as she discovered she had no gun, and she leveled her blazing eyes on the grinning face in the bed.

His grin fled as Doane's eyes met hers. His heart stopped. Her face came clear to him, as though through a rising mist; he thrilled at the firm red lips drawn now in a hard straight line; he almost gasped aloud as he caught his first glance at that dark olive skin, framed in a gay kerchief at the full round throat and crowned above with raven hair as black as midnight.

"These you shall never put on me, mio amigo."

She backed against the door, her eyes like glowing coals of black, smoldering fire; she fretted at her belt, still pulling at the gun that was not there.

"You would shoot your caballero, your prisoner, senorita?" smiled Doane as he lifted himself on one elbow. "I offer you my gun. You should find it in that holster, on the chair."

"You—you did not sleep. You tricked me!"

"Tricked you, senorita? No man with eyes to see and half a heart could stoop to trick one so beautiful." And immediately he had said it, he knew he had blundered, and he knew also that he meant it. These were not mere words; they were the echo of something buried deep within him, the echo of a still small voice that told him this was the most beautiful girl in the universe. A ruddy flush crept under the olive skin of her cheeks, and she spoke deliberately:

"Ah! Now you are insulting, senor. I would not believe it, had these ears not heard you say it. My men tell me you are brave, that you fear no man alive. But your own words make you... a fool. The gallant deputy Jim Doane it is to laugh!"

Doane chuckled. "All's fair in love and war, my friend. I think you spoke of the fortunes of war? Correct. We may have nothing to do with love, but... we are at war, senorita you and I? You know why I have come?"

"Si, I know. I am told you come to catch the train thieves."

The mere hint of a smile crept into her eyes. "And have you captured them, Mr. deputy Doane?"

"Not yet," replied Doane evenly, holding her eyes. "But I am close to them. If I were strong enough, I might put my hands on one of them, right now."

It was a shot in the dark, but it went home. The girl moved one hand swiftly to her heart, and her eyes wavered as she turned away. In an instant she was back, frowning at him, her eyes afire again.

"Listen to me, my brave one. I know who you are, and all about you. You know me, but not so well. I am not the one you think I am; I am not the one you want, not the thief you have been sent to capture. I swear it. Even if I am, you have not one little tiny piece of evidence against me. And without evidence... what?"

She picked up his handcuffs from the footpost of the bed, and jangled them while she smiled at him. "These you shall never put on me, mio amigo. And if you are not wiser than you are today, you shall never put them on anyone."

Doane grinned. She flung the bracelets away from her with a final gesture of contempt, regarded him levelly for a moment, then turned and opened the door.

He sent one last jibe at her. "Adios, senorita Dolores Alvaro!"

She turned, with her hand on the door; she walked swiftly back to him and looked at him once more, with eyes that no longer burned, but that were suddenly soft as black silk. She ran a nervous hand through her jet hair, then dropped it to his arm.

"Please... go back. Go away. Get out of this country when strength comes back. These men you seek... they are merciless... they will kill you. I know! Please..." She spun on her heel, and fled from the room.

Doane stared after her, opened his mouth to call to her. For a long time he lay there, looking into space. Again he slept, and dreamed of gay senoritas dancing in the sun. Before slumber conquered him, he told himself again that this girl had brought him back from the tortures of hell; that she had picked him up at the very gates of death, knowing well he was her sworn enemy, and that he had come for... her. He owed his life to her. A man's life meant... everything. It was the greatest of his possessions. He slept.

The hour was approaching sunset. Doane awoke and lay quietly as a man came into the room with a bowl of broth. He was the slim man of the day before.

"The hand of God upon you, senor," he said smoothly. "Broth?"

Doane saw that in age he might be anywhere between thirty-five and forty-five. He noted the peculiar, easy grace of movement, sensing in the stranger, more than seeing it, the feline suppleness of strength that rippled beneath the bright shirt. The man's hands were white and slender, tapering at the fingers as though an artist had moulded them of strong white wax. He put down the bowl of broth and took out a cigarette; he lighted it with all the grace and eloquence of a priest at his ritual. The odd gray-green eyes met Doane's with piercing directness through the spirals of smoke as he dropped his match.

"And who are you?" asked Doane.

The man made a gesture with his white hands. He bowed slightly.

"Me—I am called Garcia... Monte Garcia, senor. An' in return, senor, who are you?"

"You don't know?"

"Me, know?" exclaimed the one called Monte Garcia. "Senor, you flatter me with divine powers. You are, of course, a gentleman of importance. That is obvious! So. But more than that... ah, how could one say?"

"Where am I?"

"Close to Sand Wells. Under my roof, senor, and quite safe."

"Well, come on. Let's have the story."

"Of how you came here, you mean, senor? But yes, of course. Of course, you would wish to hear that first. It is—ah—the beginning."

Garcia made another fine gesture with his hands. Doane tossed in his bed.

"Quit stalling. Let's have it."

"I am employ' in Sand Wells. I have hands with which I work the telegraph instrument, ver' fast and without mistake, like it should be. So the railroad he like me, and I work for them. It is night work. Now, four days ago I walk home in the early morning, and what do I see, senor? None other but you. You stagger, you fall, you fall many times, you cry for water. You do not know how close you are to the town of Sand Wells, so close to houses an' water. I bring you here. An' that is all."

Monte Garcia dismissed it all like that, with yet another gesture of his graceful hands. He pulled his knees up under him and took a long, deep pull on his cigarette. He was intimating that the matter was closed and done, once and for all.

"All?" roared Doane, beside himself.

"All, I assure you, senor," came the calm answer. "Unless you would include the hospitality of my little house, such as it is. You are welcome, senor. Up to this time I have found you a ver' quiet and courteous guest."

"Bien!" snapped Doane. "I thank you for that. But listen! Deep in my mind I have another story. It differs from yours. Four men and a confederate held up an east-bound train out of Sand Wells at dusk. They hit north. I followed. Three mornings later, in the desert, five riders found me, dying of thirst. One was a girl. They brought me here. The girl is called Alvaro—she is the daughter of one senor Miguel Alvaro—and there is a warrant issued for her arrest. The warrant is sworn to by Star La Rue of Maxmilla City, and the charge is stock theft from his ranch. This girl saved my life!"

There was no change of expression on Monte's pale face. His eyes looked steadily into Doane's. He said calmly:

"Mistaire La Rue is no man. He is what you call a skunk! Or as we Spanish like to say, cabron!—because the he-goat is a more filthy animal."

THE NAVY'S BUREAUS

WASHINGTON.—If Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal wants to head off the army-navy merger, he might do some merging in his own department. As it is, some of his reserve officers are about ready to believe the army is right.

Perhaps because the navy is suffering from admiralitis (too many admirals), Forrestal has set up a special duplicating public relations co-ordinator. This bureau does exactly what another bureau also does. Chief difference between them is that one is on the first floor (deck in the navy), the other on the third floor) one is commanded by a vice admiral, the other by a rear admiral; finally, the rear admiral takes a few hours to do a job while the vice admiral sometimes takes a few days.

Hitherto, navy public relations have been handled by efficient young Rear Adm. "Min" Miller, one of the up-and-coming youngsters in the navy. If you need a speaker for a naval rally, want to stage an air show, or have a ship visit your city, Miller usually has been able to arrange it in a few hours.

But now, Vice Adm. Arthur S. Carpenter, newly appointed co-ordinator of public relations, sits in naval splendor with a staff of five senior officers, a large force of junior officers, and a small army of WAVES and enlisted men.

THE BALKY SWISS

Insiders say that Switzerland, the little nation which posed as the benign and friendly neutral, is now displaying the same tactics as the Capone gang in hanging on to Nazi loot.

The secret negotiations now going on in Washington to recover Nazi gold from Switzerland have been carefully guarded, but it has leaked out that Switzerland's policy is to keep all the gold which the Germans stole from France, Denmark, Belgium and other occupied countries and sent to Switzerland for safe-keeping.

Like the Capone gang, the Swiss won't return this looted gold to France, Denmark, Belgium and other countries from which it was stolen.

Despite all this, some treasury officials urge a lenient policy toward the Swiss. It happens that they have $1,500,000,000 of assets now frozen in this country including $500,000,000 in gold, and the French are preparing to clap a lien on these assets. Some treasury officials, however, are opposed.

Not so, however, sage Secretary of the Treasury Fred Vinson, who remembers all the Swiss collaboration with the Nazis during the war.

"Down in my state," drawled the Kentuckian, "when you bet on the wrong horse, you pay off. The Swiss bet on the wrong horse."

VETERANS COME SECOND

Young GOP Rep. James G. Fulton of Pennsylvania, a Pacific war vet., did some vigorous protesting about the way veterans are being "stood up" on surplus war goods when he called at the White House.

"Veterans are just not getting an even break in the present 'setup,'" he told the President.

The Pennsylvania congressman also gave Truman some inside slants on RFC purchases of abandoned property which would warrant congressional scrutiny. He reported that no effort is being made to sell army and navy equipment piled helter-skelter in and around a Pennsylvania glue factory purchased by the RFC in May, 1945, for use as a surplus property depot.

RED ARMY WITHDRAWS

The inscrutable Russians have a way of refusing to do something when asked, and then going ahead and doing it when not asked. For instance, Secretary of State James Byrnes has been hammering at the Russians to reduce their troops in the Balkans, Austria and Hungary.

Among other things he has warned that the United States won't send food into these countries while tremendous Russian armies are living off the land, in effect taking away the food we send in.

Foreign Commissar Vyacheslav Molotov, however, has turned a deaf ear to Byrnes' plea. He has been just as stubborn on this as about most things.

But here is the payoff. U. S. representatives in Vienna have wired the state department that the Red army has started a large scale withdrawal from Austria. There is no explanation, and state department officials are mystified as to the reason.

UNDER THE DOME

Democratic National Committee Chairman Bob Hannegan tried to submit his resignation to President Truman last week-end, but was turned down cold. Hannegan's wife and doctor are both urging him to resign. However, the President told Hannegan he could not be spared, at least until after the November elections. . . . President Truman has asked Secretary of the Interior Cap Krug to set up an interdepartmental committee to handle oil problems.

FRIENDS AT BETHANY

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:3-9; Luke 10:38-42; John 11:1-3.
MEMORY SELECTION—Let us love one another: for love is of God.—I John 4:7.

Friendship comes to those who are friendly. That response of heart to heart, which opens up the deep wells of mutual devotion, is one of life's richest experiences.

There is too little true friendship in the world because men and women have not learned of the Lord Jesus what it means to be a real friend.

There are mutual privileges and correspondingly mutual responsibilities in friendship. There are sorrows to share as well as joys, and there are times when there must be the outpouring of sacrificial devotion.

"There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus, no, not one!" is not just the sentiment of a hymn writer. There is no friend like the Lord. He, therefore, merits our fullest devotion.

There are three incidents in our lesson, all of which took place in Bethany, the little village near Jerusalem where our Lord had found real friends. He went there to rest, to pray, and to find companionship. These incidents reveal that

I. Love Gives All in Sacrificial Devotion (Mark 14:3-9).

A rather shocking thing took place in the home of Simon. Jesus, his distinguished guest, was at dinner with the disciples, when a woman walked in unannounced and anointed his head with costly spikenard ointment. The disciples were surprised, and led by the betrayer, Judas, who had his hands on and in the money bags, they protested such awful waste.

Think of it—the value of this ointment was 300 pence, the equivalent (we are told) of 500 days of work. That means in our day it would be worth from three to five thousand dollars.

She should have stopped to think! Some lesser gift would have shown her love, and this rich gift could have been used for the poor!

Thus reasons the cool, calculating church member; but the believer with his heart full of love for the Master, gives without stint.

The Lord honored her gift, and accepted it as the anointing of his body for his coming death. He reminded them that they would always have the poor to care for, and he would soon be gone.

Love which never overflows in the abandonment of sacrifice for the one beloved is a cold and distant thing; in fact, one wonders if it really should be dignified by calling it love at all.

The Lord is looking for followers who are willing to give themselves freely and gladly for him, pouring out the lovely fragrance of a life fully yielded to him.

II. Love Shares the Fellowship of Joy (Luke 10:38-42).

The little home of Mary, Martha and Lazarus in Bethany was lighted up by that intangible but delightful glow which comes with a friend who honors one's home by his or her presence.

He had often been in this home. Here he found relaxation and comfort. Here he gave of himself in fellowship and blessing.

But there was a shadow over this visit. Martha, eager to have a good dinner, was "cumbered" in heart and soon became critical of Mary because she sat at Jesus' feet.

Do not assume that Mary had not done her share of the work. She had, but she "also sat at Jesus' feet." In other words, she knew when the time had come to quit fussing and to get some real fellowship out of the joy of having Jesus in the home.

We who love and serve the Lord need to watch lest we become so "cumbered with much serving" that we lose out spiritually. We can become so busy with church work, holding offices in religious organizations, yes, even with preaching and teaching, that we do not have time for personal fellowship with the Lord.

III. Love Bears the Burden of Sorrow (John 11:1-3).

The very home where joy was the portion one day, became the house of sickness, death and sorrow on another day. Life is like that—we may all expect that tragedy, sickness and trouble will come.

What then? Well, you will find that some of your professed friends will disappear. They are fair-weather companions. They have no taste for storms. Real friends will stand by, and what a treasure they prove to be!

But here again, the best friend of all is Jesus. When Lazarus was sick, "his sisters sent unto him." Send for Jesus in the hour of need! Oh, it is true that he did not come until Lazarus was dead, but he had a good reason for that, and in due time he came.

Child Will Be Happy Over a Lawn Chair

A PINT size lawn chair is great fun for children. It adds interest to any group of outdoor furniture and you will find that it is often used by grown-ups instead of an ottoman or for a place to put books and magazines.

The small chair shown here matches the adult-size chair and is made with a pattern that gives a complete bill of materials, large diagrams for cutting each piece and illustrated construction steps. The seat of the chair is about ten inches high and thirteen inches deep.

This lawn chair is made with pattern 253; and the adult-size lawn chair is pattern 269. Patterns are 15c each or both patterns to one address for 25c. Send order with name and address to:

While hundreds of formations on the moon, such as craters, mountains and seas, have been named and renamed in the past 300 years, only 520 of these names have been retained, 200 of the most commonly used having been chosen by one man, the Italian astronomer, Riccioli, in 1651.

This letter was received by Miss Viola Lankenau, principal of the Frankfort Elementary school, from Vernon L. Nickell, Superintendent of Public Instruction:

Dear Miss Lankenau,

Your school was recently visited by a representative from my office for the purpose of evaluating your educational program and advising with you about any of your school programs. On the basis of that evaluation, your Annual Report, and the recommendation of your County Superintendent, I am glad to extend full recognition to your school for the current school year.

Your certificate of Recognition which I hope you will display in a prominent place, has been sent to your County Superintendent for his signature. You will no doubt, receive it in a few days. May I congratulate your board on its efforts to maintain adequate educational opportunities for the boys and girls of your community. This is only possible thru community board teacher cooperation. Your community has entrusted you with serious responsibility of educating and training its children. I am sure you will be satisfied only when you are offering them the best opportunities possible.

The services of my office are available to you at all times. Your suggestions and criticisms will be appreciated. I hope we can visit your school again in the near future.

Very sincerely yours,
Vernon L. Nickell,

Electricity...

a vital farm tool on more than 87% of the farms in this area

Way Back in 1912—thirty-four years ago—127 northern Illinois farmers blew out lamps and lanterns for the last time ... started flipping switches to flood their homes and barns with safe, electric light. By 1925, more than 800 miles of rural electric lines were serving 1000 customers; and at the end of 1935, almost 9,000 farmers on 2,800 miles of power lines were enjoying the numerous benefits of electricity. Came 1943 and nearly 20,000 farmers were using power to make farming easier and more profitable.

Today There Are More than 6,500 miles of rural electric lines threading their way along main roads, up and down dirt and side roads, criss-crossing the 6,200 square mile territory served by the Public Service Company. Over these electrical highways travel the kilowatts that kick up farm production and profits ... cut down work ... make daily living more convenient and comfortable on 26,973 farms and rural units.

The Power That Flows through these lines comes from the same dependable, interconnected sources that not only supplied the farmers with much-needed help during war years, but also met the tremendous wartime power demands of hundreds of war industries.

As A Consequence of careful planning and increased facilities, there is today, as there was during the war years, a reservoir of electric power—the modern tool of agriculture—that enables the farmer to save more pigs ... produce more eggs ... add more cows to his herd ... get more milk—and keep it at top quality. It's a "wired" hand that neither sleeps nor tires—it's a willing worker that does the job faster ... better ... cheaper.

There Are Now 30,041 farms and rural units in the area served by this company. 26,973 of them already have electricity or have contracted for it. Obviously, then our goals this year are two: to stretch rural power lines to the most remote farms and supply every farmer with all the power he wants and needs ... to help him get the most benefit from it. And most important—to do both as quickly as possible in order that he may enjoy farming at its very best.

Food and Labor Are Nation's Topics

Passage of Housing Bill Spurs Building Program; Hoover Asks World to Join in Famine Fight

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FAMINE:

Hoover Reports

Back from his globe-girdling famine survey, former Pres. Herbert Hoover called for additional voluntary food conservation on the part of Americans and also declared that the co-operation of Russia and South American states would greatly assist in tiding hungry areas over the critical pre-harvest period.

Though stating that he saw no instances of actual starvation on his global whirl, Hoover was quick to add that available food supplies were at a dangerous low in many countries and famine would result if supplies were not replenished.

Even after trimming requests of some countries, Hoover declared that over 14 million tons of food were needed until the next harvest, with the United Kingdom requiring 2,000,000 tons; France, 1,750,000 tons; Germany, 1,370,000 tons; Italy, 775,000 tons; Poland, 340,000 tons; Czechoslovakia, 290,000 tons; Belgium, 300,000 tons; Greece, 275,000 tons; Yugoslavia, 250,000 tons; Spain, 240,000 tons; Austria, 225,000 tons; the Indian ocean area, 2,886,000 tons and China and Japan, 870,000 tons each.

In asking Russia to share some of its surplus grain and calling upon South American countries to step up deliveries, Hoover said the U. S. shipment of 450 million bushels of wheat during this crop year is an unparalleled achievement. In all, the U. S. is expected to provide 4,220,000 tons of cereals; Canada, 2,300,000; Australia, 992,000; Argentina, 2,375,000; Russia, 300,000, plus lesser amounts from the United Kingdom, Brazil, Burma and Siam.

Hoover's announcement of world food needs followed close upon the department of agriculture's prediction that continuing drouth in the Great Plains states would cut winter wheat production by 88 million bushels under the April 1 estimate. The crop now is set at 742,887,000 bushels.

INDIA:

Seek Compromise

As a result of the collapse in negotiations for Indian independence because of Moslem demands for a separate state, the British delegation's statement on further steps to be taken for resolving the deadlock was expected to provide a basis for continuing discussions.

In originally making its offer for Indian independence, the British government had declared that Moslem demands for a separate state should not block plans for free-

HOUSING:

Get Going

Welcoming final passage of the veterans' housing measure designed to push construction of 2,700,000 new homes by 1947, Housing Expediter Wilson Wyatt cheerfully exclaimed: "The . . . program now can be thrown into full gear."

Worked out by house and senate conferees, who labored to draw up a common bill from two different pieces of legislation, the measure represented a victory for the administration forces in that it provides subsidies of 400 million dollars to increase the production of building materials. Earlier opposed by the house, the subsidies later were approved on the strength of administration arguments that such payments would boost the flow of construction supplies without increasing the cost of new homes.

In addition to the subsidy provision, the new housing bill authorizes the government to increase home mortgage lending by one billion dollars; extends priorities and allocation power to channel materials into low-cost and medium-priced residences to December 31, 1947; establishes preference for vets in purchasing or renting new structures; gives the housing expediter broad authority to order changes in material pricing regulations, and empowers him to limit the export of lumber as long as scarcities exist in this country.

DRAFT:

O. K. Extension

Allowed only hours in which to act to prevent the extinction of the selective service act, the senate accepted stiff house amendments to the draft calling for cessation of inductions of fathers and teenagers.

Passage of the measure extending selective service until July 1 resulted from rapid-fire congressional action in the midst of senate deliberations over approval of the multi-billion dollar British loan and restrictive labor legislation. With the senate pausing in its discussion of these issues to o.k. existing draft legislation until July 1 to beat the expiration deadline, the house took advantage of the time element to dilute the draft and force its remittance to the upper chamber for reconsideration.

WASHINGTON DIGEST

Taft Looms as 1948 GOP Hope

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, 1616 Eye Street, N.W., Washington, D. C.

Along about June of any election year, when a lot of simple souls are thinking about moonlight and roses, electric fans, and where to go for a summer vacation, a lot of longer-range planners are wondering about next winter's coal supply, harvest time, and many other things a lot further away than the fly on your nose. Among these are the politicians.

It's a great time to lean back in a chair in the Senate office building or thereabouts, open another bottle of White Rock, light another seegar, and burble on about what's going to happen come November, and still more intriguing, to prognosticate on presidential possibilities.

It's fun for the newcomers because it's so easy for them to predict, in the light of what's happening right now, just what will happen then. It's still more fun for the old timers because they know that the voters who may not love you in the autumn often seem very palsy in the spring—and vice versa.

Since there isn't much use in speculating on who the Democratic presidential nominee will be, it's more interesting to talk about Republican possibilities.

Perhaps that is why, along about the middle of May, the heavy backers of Bob Taft began to be heard from. Up until then, most of the talk in the couloirs was how Bricker was the No. 1 boy, and how Stassen mustn't even be mentioned above a whisper. Even Stassen's own men decided it was better for the young man from Minnesota to keep his head down so he wouldn't attract any lightning until he had found out whether his forums were more potent than the against-em's.

Now it's getting to be more serious fun to talk about Taft. Taft wants to be President. He has wanted to be President before. He is pretty much master of the Republican organization, but even if he weren't, Bricker, his present friend and rival, is more "beatable," despite the good impression he made on his speaking tour before the last convention . . . what with the leftist look in so many veterans' eyes.

Bricker has a staunch and solid conservative following. But it is a little too solidly conservative. Taft could hardly be called a radical. In fact, his political garden has never produced even a pale and lonely pink. On the other hand, his supporters prudently can point to many a constructively liberal measure which has had his blessing.

Only the other day, I was talking with an ardent administration official who has been battling for a measure badly battered by conservatives of both political stripes. I asked him if he could expect to retrieve in the senate a certain provision in his legislation, lost in the house.

"Oh, yes," he answered, "Bob Taft will go along on that."

And Taft has a good liberal record on such mass-appeal measures as housing.

The Republicans don't have to deal with the old-line bosses to the extent that the Democrats do and in two of the larger cities where the Republican machine is vital—Philadelphia and Cincinnati—everything would be jake so far as Taft is concerned. He, himself, is kingpin in his home state organization . . . and Mr. Pew, who makes the Republican wheels go round in Pennsylvania, wanted Taft in '40 and '44. It is to be presumed he'll feel the same in '48.

This doesn't eliminate other brilliant possibilities, including Messrs. Stassen and Vandenberg.

Mr. Vandenberg has done a lot of the molding himself. This could work both ways. On the one hand, the energy and devotion with which Mr. Vandenberg has applied himself to foreign affairs, and the powerful influence he has exerted, have greatly increased his silhouette on the international horizon. On the other hand, these activities, both in quantity and quality, have taken him far afield from the usual political approach to a Republican presidential nomination.

It may be there is a niche in the making that would need a man of his proportion to fill but one Democrat said to me the other day: "Sometimes it looks as if Van would rather be right than President."

DIPLOMACY:

On Dollar Basis

Having used its great material resources to balance the scales for allied military victory over the axis, the U. S. now is acting to employ its tremendous wealth for the stabilization of political conditions abroad to promote free exchange between nations.

Popularly known as "dollar diplomacy," the administration's first open application of the policy in the postwar period was to Poland and China, where Communist influence has been strong and shaped to serve Russia's political and economic interests.

In the case of Poland, the U. S. suspended a 90 million dollar credit to the Soviet-sponsored Warsaw government on charges that it had violated its pledge to increase freedom of movement within the country. First, the U. S. said that the government had censored an American reporter's dispatch regarding a critical speech made by a Peasant party leader, and second, it had failed to publish terms of the U. S. credit providing for political freedom in Poland.

Taken back by the U. S. action, the Polish embassy in Washington declared that it could categorically deny that any censorship existed in Poland, and explained that the terms of the loan had not arrived in Warsaw in time to permit their publication up to the time of the U. S. credit cancellation.

Meanwhile, Gen. George C. Marshall was given full control over a proposed half billion dollar loan to China in his efforts to weld the Nationalist and Communist forces together into a central government and create a unified country.

UNRRA:

Seeking to prevent death-dealing riderpest among surviving cattle and water buffalo herds of China, one million doses of a new type vaccine were flown by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration to Shanghai as a gift of the U. S. and Canada.

Emphasizing the significance of the gift, UNRRA Director LaGuardia declared every water buffalo or bullock saved for the plow means the assurance of that much more food for the needy.

LABOR:

Busy President

Coal strikes, rail strikes and demands of labor and industry are heavy burdens on President Truman these days. If one threatening strike is settled, another one is threatened, or breaks out. Labor and industry are in an all-out battle, and the President is caught in between them with the great mass of American people clamoring for action. Congress, too, is finding the seats on Capitol Hill steadily growing warmer. The OPA and the British loan were no small worries either.

The pressure of the United Mine Workers, the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organization, on the President was matched by the manufacturers, mine operators, railroad owners and big business and industry in general. Lights burn late in the White House, and daily visitors to the President are greater than ever before! The people of the United States have a busy President. And when all the present strikes are settled, negotiations for new contracts will begin again next fall.

Sebaceous Glands

Sebaceous glands, whose job is to lubricate, occur in groups of tiny bag-like structures, with ducts which usually lead to one of the hairs which are on most parts of the body. There are probably over two million such glands in the average skin. Yet there are places where they are completely absent, such as the palms and soles. And many of us know, to our regret, that they are particularly abundant on our scalp, nose and along the median lines of the trunk. Yet we would be in bad shape without these tiny, constantly working glands for the sebum they deliver is essential to keep the skin's protective layer flexible and watertight.

Social Security Pays

Monthly old age insurance payments under the Social Security Act are payable for the rest of their lives to retired workers who can qualify for the payments regardless of the amount paid in social security taxes. This statement was made today by Mr. J. B. Harper, Manager of the Harvey, Ill. Social Security board office.

"Some workers think they can draw out after they are 65 only as much as they have paid in social security taxes," Mr. Harper said. "Because of this mistaken idea, some people delay in claiming their benefits and tell us, 'I did not want to start drawing on what I had to have it.'"

"This misunderstanding is serious," Mr. Harper explained, "because these people who delay in claiming their benefits not only fail to get benefits for the months for which they were eligible before they claimed them, but the amount of their benefit checks may be smaller for the rest of their lives." "The length of time during which a person can get old-age insurance benefits does not depend on the amount of social security taxes paid," Mr. Harper said. "A worker who qualifies for monthly old-age insurance benefits will receive them for every month as long as he lives, starting with the month in which he files his claim, except for any month in which he is back at work again and earning more than $14.99 on a job covered by social security."
